Comments: The whole debate concerning the future of Yucca Mountain is quite simple. States that benefit from nuclear power (and the companies that make money from it) should be responsible for the disposal of it. Why anyone should think that a state that does not engage in the manufacture of nuclear power should be responsible for storing the waste of those who do is beyond me. If a state chooses to use it, they should take care of the waste in their own state. Really quite simple, don't you think?
